Curriculum

I have a degree in Media Studies from UFES and a postgraduate degree in Strategic Marketing from UVV, both in Brazil. In Portugal, I completed a master's degree in Communication, Culture, and Information Technologies at ISCTE-IUL, with a project focused on the relationship between young people and politics.

The experience of joining a climate activism collective in Lisbon while still studying for my master's degree sparked my interest in gaining a deeper understanding of the strategies of the climate movement in the country. And that is what I am doing today in my PhD, dedicating myself to researching climate activism and its contribution to communication about climate change.

At the same time, I have participated in activities related to the topic, such as facilitating one of the sessions during the 10th ENJC (National Meeting for Climate Justice), as well as presenting one of my articles at the International Symposium on Radicalization, Mainstreaming, and Reconciliation, promoted by the University of Navarra.

My journey combines practice, research, and critical reflection, with a focus on the relevance of communication in addressing the challenges of the climate crisis.
